QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether a union can associate in fact with one of its officers to form an "enterprise" within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4) of RICO.

2. Whether, in a case brought under § 1962(c) of RICO, a union and one of its officers can be both the "persons" who conduct an enterprise's activities through a pattern of racketeering and the "enterprise" whose affairs are so conducted.

3. Whether the cross-petitioners' Seventh Amendment right to a jury trial was violated where the jury's verdict was set aside based on an evaluation of the evidence which in general failed to take every inference in favor of the jury's verdict and in particular misread the date on a notice of deposition filed with the court and refused to connect the union's campaign of sabotage and bad faith litigation against Yellow Bus with the company's inability to pay its bills.

Cross-Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of the Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit

The cross-petitioners, Yellow Bus Lines, Inc. ("Yellow Bus"),[1] Paula Westgate, Maria Triggs, and Peter McKinnon respectfully cross-petition for a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit entered on February 12, 1988.

[1]Cross-petitioner Yellow Bus has no parent companies, subsidiaries, or affiliates to list pursuant to Rule 28.1.

Opinion Below

The decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit is reported at 839 F.2d 782 and is reproduced in the Petitioners' Appendix at 1a-25a. The decisions of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia are unreported and are reproduced in the Petitioners' Appendix at 26-65a.

Jurisdiction

The judgment of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit was entered on February 12, 1988. Pet. App. 2a. Cross-petitioners timely filed for rehearing on March 11, 1988. The Circuit Court's order denying rehearing was entered on May 6, 1988. Pet. App. 73a. The petition was received by cross-petitioners on August 2, 1988. This cross-petition is timely filed pursuant to Rule 19.5 of the Rules of this Court. This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

Constitutional Provision and Statutes Involved

The Seventh Amendment to the Constitution provides:

> In Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise reexamined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. § 1961, et seq., provides in pertinent part:

(3) "person" includes any individual or entity capable of holding a legal or beneficial interest in property:

(4) "enterprise" includes any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity;

18 U.S.C. § 1961 (3) and (4)

(a) It shall be unlawful for any person who has received any income derived, directly or indirectly, from a pattern of racketeering activity or through collection of an unlawful debt in which such person has participated within the meaning of Section 2, title 18, United States Code, to use or invest, directly or indirectly, any part of such income, or the proceeds of such income, in acquisition of any interest in, or the establishment or operation of, any enterprise which is engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce. A purchase of securities on the open market for purposes of investment, and without the intention of controlling or participating in the control of the issuer, or of assisting another to do so, shall not be unlawful under this subsection if the securities of the issuer held by the purchaser, the members of his immediate family, and his or their accomplices in any pattern or racketeering activity or the collection of an unlawful debt after such purchase do not amount in the aggregate to one percent of the outstanding securities of any one class, and do not confer, either in law or in fact, the power to elect one or more directors of the issuer.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any person through a pattern of racketeering activity or through collection of an unlawful debt to acquire or maintain, directly or indirectly, any interest in or control of any enterprise which is engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce.

(c) It shall be unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt.

(d) It shall be unlawful for any person to conspire to violate any of the provisions of subsections (a), (b), or (c) of this section.

18. U.S.C. § 1962(a), (b), (c), and (d).

Statement of the Case

The necessary facts are set out in Cross-Petitioner's Statement of the Case in its Brief in Opposition to the Petition for Certiorari (pp. 1-4).

Reasons Why the Cross-Petition Should be Granted

1. The Circuit Court incorrectly concluded that Woodward and Local Union 639 could not serve simultaneously as an "enterprise" and as "person[s]" under RICO.

Yellow Bus' original complaint alleged that Woodward together with Local 639 constituted "an enterprise" within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4) and treated Woodward and Local 639 as "person[s]" within the meaning of § 1961(3) whose conduct violated 18 U.S.C. §1962(c) and (d).

The Circuit Court noted that three out of four Circuit Courts which had considered this issue had concluded that the "person" and "enterprise" had to be distinct under Section 1962(c). According to the Circuit Court, this result flowed both from the language of 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4) which defines enterprise to include "any individual [etc.] . . . and any group of individuals associated in fact," and the policy behind RICO. On the language prong of its argument, the Court quoted Judge Posner of the Seventh Circuit to the effect that "you cannot associate with yourself." McCullough v. Suter, 757 F.2d 142, 144 (7th Cir. 1985). Pet. App. 13a.

On the policy prong the Circuit Court made two arguments. It pointed out that "[a]bsent the non-identity requirement, respondeat superior could operate to impose § 1962(c) liability on a corporation that is unaware of the racketeering activities of its agents and has not been enriched by those activities" (Pet. App. 15a). It also noted that corrupt organizations which conduct their own affairs by illegal means may often be subject to another section of RICO, §1962(a), which prohibits the receipt and subsequent investment of racketeering proceeds. Pet. App. 14a.

The Circuit Court found unavailing Yellow Bus' attempt to avoid the non-identity requirement by depicting the RICO enterprise as an "association-in-fact" comprised of Local 639 and Woodward, an entity distinct from the named defendants. After noting a conflict in the authorities, the Circuit Court concluded that "an organization cannot join with its own members to do that which it normally does and thereby form an enterprise separate and apart from itself" (Pet. App. 17a) because (1) "there is no difference between the union as an entity including Woodward as officer, and the union plus Woodward"

(Pet. App. 17a) and (2) allowing plaintiffs to generate such contrived partnerships consisting of an umbrella organization and its subsidiary parts, would render the non-identity requirement of § 1962(c) meaningless (Pet. App. 17a).

As we see it, however, at least three Circuit's decisions support Yellow Bus' contention here. In United States v. Hartley, 678 F.2d 961, 987-90 (11th Cir. 1982), the court found that there need not be a distinction between a "person" and "enterprise" in actions brought under 18 U.S.C. §§ 1962(c) and (d), at least, as here, where a corporation is not involved. In McCullough v. Suter, supra, the Seventh Circuit held that a sole proprietorship could be an "enterprise" with which its proprietor could be "associated" within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) so long as the sole proprietorship had other employees or associates. In United States v. Benny, 786 F.2d 1510, cert. denied 107 S.Ct. 668 (1986), the Ninth Circuit came to the same conclusion. McCullough and Benny directly support Yellow Bus here against the District of Columbia Circuit's conclusion that "an organization cannot join with its own members to do that which it normally does and thereby form an enterprise separate and apart from itself."

The Circuit Court's arguments addressed to the literal language of the statute are also not well taken. It may be true that "you cannot associate with yourself" but you can certainly be associated with something of which you are a part, as, for example, an associate in a law firm. Likewise, it may be true that a union cannot join with a member to do what it normally does and thereby form something distinct, but this proposition does not address the facts of the instant case because unions do not "normally" engage in racketeering activity. More importantly, the Circuit Court's reasoning, in relying on Woodward's legal subsumption by the union of which he was a member, substitutes an "associated in law" approach for the term actually used, "associated in fact although not entity." Local 639 and Woodward are obviously associated in fact.

Finally, the RICO policy argument goes entirely the other way. Cases such as the present one, in which a union generally viewed as racketeer-influenced repeatedly uses criminal acts of violence and extortion to force itself on a company, were obviously among those cases that Congress intended to reach. § 1962(a) cannot reach this case unless the evil-doer is successful and obtains proceeds to invest. § 1962(b) may, as the Circuit Court found, apply, but it surely is a more awkward formulation to say that Woodward and Local 639 conducted the affairs of Yellow Bus through a pattern of racketeering activity than it is to say they conducted their own affairs through a pattern of racketeering. The Circuit Court's concerns with respondeat superior are well-taken, but the way to meet them is to require the plaintiff to show that the principal was aware of his racketeering agents acts and ratified them. In that way "innocent organizations" (Pet. App. 15a) will escape prosecution, but guilty ones will not.

Congress has specifically directed that RICO be "liberally construed to effect its remedial purpose." Pub. L. No. 91-452, § 504(a), 84 Stat. 947 (1969). Congress specifically cited racketeering in the "trucking business as one of the targets of RICO. S. Rep. No. 91-617, 91st Cong., 1st Sess. 78 (1969). The Circuit Court's ruling in this case forecloses the most obvious legal remedy against the typical unlawful conduct of this union.

Because the Circuit Courts are divided (1) on the issue whether a "person" and an "enterprise" must be distinct under 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) and (2) on the issue whether an organization can join with some of its members to form an "enterprise" separate from itself, and because these issues frequently recur and cannot be resolved without this Court's intervention, the cross-petition for certiorari should be granted.

II. The Circuit Court's decision failed to take every inference in favor of the jury's verdict and otherwise misread the record.

(a) Contrary to the Circuit Court's opinion, the record conclusively establishes (1) that Woodward's lawyer commenced discovery three months before the criminal charges against Woodward were resolved by a plea bargain and (2) that obtaining a discovery in the civil action for use in the criminal action was one of the reasons for filing the civil action.

The Circuit Court wrote:

> Appellants' abuse of process claim fails because one of the alleged ulterior aims is implausible, and the other was not achieved. The appellants claimed that Woodward sought to discover information vital to his criminal defense and to coerce the company to make labor concessions. However, the fact that Woodward's lawyer did not commence discovery until after Woodward's criminal charges were dropped conclusively discredits discovery as an "ulterior motive." Pet. App. 9a-10a, emphasis supplied.

The record, we respectfully submit, is otherwise.

Woodward filed the original complaint in this case on November 4, 1982. Cross-Pet. App. 1a. On November 15, 1982, Woodward's attorney issued a subpoena for production of documents and noted the deposition of Maria Triggs and Paula Westgate for November 26, 1982. Cross-Pet. App. 2a-5a. Woodward resolved the three-count felony indictment (Cross-Pet. App. 6a). by a plea to a misdemeanor on February 8, 1983. Cross-Pet. App. 7a. Accordingly, the record conclusively establishes that Woodward's lawyer "commenced" discovery approximately three months before criminal charges were "dropped."

The "alleged ulterior aim" was also not "implausible" because Woodward's lawyer wrote two letters to the President of Local 639, offered in evidence but excluded by the District Court, which referred to a "Proposed civil rights case," urging that the case be filed quickly in order to have the deposition transcripts available for the criminal trial. In his September 20, 1982, letter, Woodward's lawyer wrote:

> Since I think it would be advisable to have the deposition transcripts in this proceeding available for Woodie's criminal trial, now set for December 3, 1982, it is necessary that we begin work on the case shortly. Therefore, we are operating under some close time constraints.

In his October 7, 1982, letter, Woodward's lawyer wrote:

> I will be out of town from tomorrow until October 18, 1982. Hence it does not appear feasible to file the case to allow adequate time to take depositions of the principals and to receive the transcripts of those depositions prior to Woodie's scheduled December 3, 1982 criminal trial. However, if it is to be filed at all, the case must be filed no later than November 6, 1982. In the event that the criminal trial must be rescheduled, however, and if the civil case is filed soon, we may have the deposition transcripts available.

After Woodward filed on November 4, 1982, he noticed the depositions of Paula Westgate, President of Yellow Bus, and Maria Triggs, Secretary-Treasurer of Yellow Bus, for November 26, 1982, just 22 days later and just seven days before his criminal trial scheduled for December 3, 1982. Rule 30(a), F.R.C.P. does not permit depositions in a civil case until 30 days after the filing of the case absent unusual circumstances which Woodward never proffered. The depositions were in fact not taken before Woodward's plea bargain only because Westgate and Triggs and subsequently the United States moved to stay the depositions. The evidence provided an adequate basis for the conclusion that at least one reason why Woodward filed the civil case was to obtain evidence for use in his criminal case.

(b) Contrary to the Circuit Court's opinion the record conclusively establishes that one of the ulterior aims was achieved, to wit, to put Yellow Bus out of business.

The Court wrote:

> Appellants' abuse of process claim fails because one of the alleged ulterior aims is implausible, and the other was not achieved. . .. [E]ven if Woodward had initially commenced legal action to induce Yellow Bus to acquiesce in his labor demands, appellants suffered no actionable injury because Woodward did not accomplish this impermissible purpose.

Pet. App. 9(a)-10(a), emphasis supplied.

This analysis may well be correct, but it is not dispositive because there was another ulterior aim. At the first meeting between Westgate and Woodward, Woodward told Westgate that "the union had millions and millions of dollars and if [Westgate] decided to fight them that they would take us to court and the result would be Yellow Bus Lines would go out of business." Accordingly, the jury could permissibly conclude that Woodward filed the lawsuit to put Yellow Bus out of business.[2] It is uncontested that Yellow Bus did go out of business. Accordingly, Yellow Bus has demonstrated not only ulterior motive but success in achieving the impermissible purpose. To recapitulate, the evidence showed that Woodward filed this case for three reasons, (1) to take depositions for use in the criminal case against him, and (2) to get a labor contract from Yellow Bus or (3), as Woodward specifically threatened, to put Yellow Bus out of business. Woodward achieved his third objective.

[2]Also excluded by the District Court was evidence of legal fees caused by the union's bad faith litigation. These fees exceded Yellow Bus' net profit in its best year and were probably the most important factor in putting Yellow Bus out of business.

(c) Contrary to the Circuit Court's opinion, the record conclusively establishes that Yellow Bus did offer evidence of the union's intent to procure a breach of the Jewish Day School ("JDS") contract.

The Circuit Court wrote that Yellow Bus offered "no evidence whatsoever of the Local's intent to procure a breach of this particular contract" (Pet. App. 8a, emphasis supplied). Yellow Bus' proof in part, showed: (1) Woodward threatened to put Yellow Bus out of business; (2) Woodward was aware Yellow Bus had a contract with JDS; (3) the JDS contract provided 34 to 41% of Yellow Bus' business; (4) on the first day of the strike, a striking driver in Woodward's presence and with his encouragement, threatened to cut the brake lines on one of the buses in front of a parent of two children at JDS; and (5) also, on the first day of the strike, Local 639 picketed at the Jewish Day School, and someone ice-picked tires on the buses parked there.

This evidence provided the jury with a proper basis for concluding that Woodward intended to procure a breach of the JDS contract. The chain of reasoning is (1) Woodward wished to put Yellow us out of business so he wanted to interfere with all of its contracts, (2) Woodward knew of the existence and importance of the JDS contract from talking with the striking drivers, (3) the striking drivers during the strike particularly attacked the JDS contract, (4) Woodward was responsible for the striking drivers' conduct during the strike, (5) therefore, Woodward intended to procure a breach of this particular contract.

Thus, the striking drivers announced to JDS on the first day of the strike in two dramatic incidents that JDS should not deal with Yellow Bus. The union, as the Circuit Court has found (Pet. App. 4a-8a), ratified that conduct. Therefore, a jury could rationally infer that the union intended to procure the breach of this particular contract. The Circuit Court was compelled to accept the jury's inference.

(d) Contrary to the Circuit Court's opinion, Yellow Bus did offer evidence connecting the JDS cancellation and the union's malefaction.

The court found that Yellow Bus failed to offer "the most elementary evidence of any causal connection between the cancellation and the appellees' malefaction" (Pet. App. 9a). The record, we respectfully submit, is otherwise.

Yellow Bus' evidence showed that it went out of business because it lost it's school contracts, chiefly the JDS contract. It lost the JDS contract, as the Court found, (1) because of its difficulties with the IRS and (2) inadequate service (Pet. App. 9a).

The Circuit Court minimized any causal link between Yellow Bus' difficulties with the IRS and the union on the ground that "Yellow Bus difficulties with the IRS pre-dated the Local's involvement with the company" (Pet. App. 9a). This is true but not important. The only tax payment which Yellow Bus missed prior to the Local's involvement was a withholding tax payment due September 30, 1981, in the amount of $3,747.77. Westgate testified this was a cyclical problem in the bus business resulting from no business in August and the need to pay insurance premiums in September. The amount could have been made up before the end of the year but for the $3,200 in malicious destruction of property (Pet. App. 4a).

The Circuit Court found no connection between the union's activities and inadequate service because (1) "[a]bundant testimony linked the company's poor performance to lax employee discipline and the rapid deterioration of the company's stock of antiquated busses after the departure of its only skilled mechanic in the fall of 1982" (Pet. App. 9a) and (2) "[a] number of Yellow Bus' own witnesses admitted that these difficulties were not traceable to appellees' efforts or action" (Pet. App. 9a).

Yellow Bus concedes the first proposition.[3] That was the theory of its case. The record does not support the second proposition.

With respect to the first proposition, Westgate testified uneqivocally that Yellow Bus could not discipline its drivers because whenever it attempted to discipline a pro-union driver, an unfair labor practice charge would be filed. Nine of these ten unfair labor practice charges were later dismissed, and the evidence at trial, taking every inference in favor of Yellow Bus, showed that that charge was also meritless. Westgate testified specifically that because pro-union drivers could not be disciplined, Yellow Bus could not discipline anti-union drivers, who perceived a double standard.

Yellow Bus lost Peter McKinnon, its skilled mechanic, because he became psychotic. Dr. Kalibat, a distinguished psychiatrist, testified that McKinnon became psychotic due to the pressure on him to safeguard the lives of the school children despite the drivers' sabotage of the buses.[4] In short, the jury could properly infer that the lax employee discipline and the loss of McKinnon resulted from the union's activities.

[3]Absenteeism more than doubled in the year following the strike. Subcontracting expenses, the need to hire other bus companies when Yellow Bus' drivers were absent, quintupled. Maintenance costs increased by a third. Gross receipts also increased in the year following the strike, but net receipts declined, and the company ceased to be profitable.

Even had they done so, it would be irrelevant whether any of Yellow Bus' witnesses admitted that these difficulties were not "traceable to appellees' efforts" (Pet. App. 9a). Whether the difficulties were attributable to the union within the contemplation of 29 U.S.C. § 106 was a conclusion of law, objected to as such, as to which none of Yellow Bus' witnesses were competent to testify. See, United States v. Phillips, 478 F.2d 743, 746, n. 6 (5th Cir. 1973). It was not only an issue of law but a difficult one because the Circuit Court held that the District Court, itself, misinterpreted 29 U.S.C. § 106. Pet. App. 4a-8a.

In any event, Yellow Bus' testimony, taking every inference in favor of the jury verdict, provides no support for the Court's conclusion. When laymen such as Westgate and McKinnon testify that they have no "direct evidence" or that they have no "evidence" or "proof" just "feelings," they are not giving factual testimony.[5] Since they are laymen, it is factual evidence that they gave, not the legal characterization, which was entitled to any weight. The factual evidence, on which the jury properly relied, showed the causal connection between the cancellation of the JDS contract and the union's acts.

[4]McKinnon testified about numerous instances of damages to the buses after the strike which under all the circumstances must have been caused by purposeful sabotage. The District Court accepted this evidence for purposes of the hypothetical to Kalibat, which the court referred to as the "correct version of the evidence."

[5]On cross-examination, Westgate testified that when she said she had no evidence she meant no "direct evidence." She did not know what "circumstantial evidence" was.

We recognize that this Court will not grant certiorari in the usual case in which a Circuit Court allegedly misevaluates the record. However, this case is unusual. Each of the points argued in this section of the cross-petition was argued to the Circuit Court on a petiton for rehearing with meticulous citation to the record, and the Circuit Court did not modify its opinion. It simply cannot be concluded on this record that Woodward did not commence discovery until after his criminal charges were dropped or that the union's campaign of sabotage against Yellow Bus had nothing to do with its inability to pay its bills or the departure of its skilled mechanic. Because the Circuit Court's decision setting aside the jury's verdict constitutes a clear denial of cross-petitioners' Seventh Amendment rights, and because the preclusive effect of the judgments on the common law torts will interfere with cross-petitioners' RICO claims, the cross-petition for certiorari should be granted.

CONCLUSION

For all of the reasons advanced, the cross-petition should be granted.
